

Disclosure Statement for From Today's City to Tomorrow's City: An Empirical Investigation of Urban Land Assembly

Byron Lutz

I am not permitted to accept outside funding for research as an employee of the Federal Reserve. However, the project was supported by the Lincoln Institute for Land Policy, McGill University, the University of Toronto, Fonds de recherche sur la société et la culture, and the John Randolph Haynes and Dora Haynes Foundation. All of the funding was distributed to my co-author, Leah Brooks, during the time when she was not an employee of the Federal Reserve. I received data at no cost from publicly available sources, including the Los Angeles County government (this does not include the main data source; that is parcel data that my co-author purchased from three sources).

Leah Brooks

I received financial support for this project from the Lincoln Institute for Land Policy, McGill University, the University of Toronto, Fonds de recherche sur la société et la culture, and the John Randolph Haynes and Dora Haynes Foundation. I received data at no cost from publicly available sources, including the Los Angeles County government (this does not include the main data source; that is parcel data that we purchased from three sources). I served on the board of directors for the National Tax Association from 2010-2013, and on the board of directors for the American Real Estate and Urban Economics Association 2013-2016.

While I was employed at the Federal Reserve Board (2011-2014), I was not permitted to accept, and did not accept, outside funding for research.
